MAGELLAN&ELCANO 500

CIRCUMNAVIGATION TO GLOBALIZATION

The 500 years elapsed since the Portuguese Ferdinand Magellan and the Spaniard Sebastián Elcano embarked on what is considered to be the greatest nautical feat in history have completely and forever changed the way we understand the world. The naval expedition that returned to Spanish soil after a three-year journey (1519-1522) had not only found a new route to the coveted Spice Islands, but also proved that the Earth was round. From Spain's Tenerife, the American Rio de Janeiro, Río de la Plata, Patagonia, Tierra del Fuego or the stormy strait that would immortalize Magellan's name to the Asian Philippines, Sumatra or Moluccas, the African Cape of Good Hope or the effervescent and cosmopolitan Renaissance Seville, this epochal voyage opened the way to the globalized world, promoting the rapprochement between different countries and continents, widening the cultural horizon and promoting the dissemination and exchange of new ideas. And this is how this extraordinary feat reminds us of why the 16th century represented the heyday of what has come to be called the Age of Discovery: reaching the Americas, the conquest of the great native civilizations, the founding of the first American cities, the discovery of the Pacific and the Amazon, the conquest of Central America and the Caribbean, or the multifaceted process of colonization, among many other historical events that engendered new ways of capturing the world, contributed to the phenomenon of total communication, to the point where the global society is today. Thanks to the adventures and deeds of prowess – whether on the high seas or on mainland – of such figures as Christopher Columbus, Amerigo Vespucci, Hernán Cortés, Francisco Pizarro, Pedrarias Dávila, Pedro de Valdivia, Vasco Núñez de Balboa, John and Sebastian Cabot, Juan Ponce de León, Francisco de Orellana, Juan Díaz de Solís, Pedro Álvarez Cabral, Ferdinand Magellan, Sebastián Elcano, Jacques Cartier and many other intrepid navigators that adorn the rich panoply of explorers and conquerors, people became aware of the real dimensions of the Planet.

In order to celebrate the 5th Centenary of the Circumnavigation of the Earth and its heroes, as well as the invaluable material and cultural legacy that the Age of Discovery bequeathed to Humanity, we invite contributions (articles and book reviews) addressing the following lines of research: comparative literature, theory and literary criticism, history, anthropology, cultural studies, colonial and postcolonial studies, translation studies, film studies, music and visual arts.
